We have exciting news to report to our authors and readers. The Journal of Agricultural and Resource Economics is now a member of the Directory of Open Access Journals (DOAJ). This is a major step forward for our journal, as this broadens our readership, increases the visibility of articles, and will increase the interest in and use of our journal by many around the world. This was no easy feat and the editors thank Amy Bekkerman for tirelessly pursuing this designation.

One immediate benefit is that all the JARE back issues will become searchable in the DOAJ, which will link to our past articles on AgEcon Search. Also, many universities now encourage (and some even subsidize) submissions to Open Access journals, so we are in a position to be a primary Open Access journal in our field.

Finally, our copyright policy has officially changed. The JARE now operates under a Creative Commons BY-NC license, which means that authors retain their copyright to their published material and grant the JARE the rights to publish their paper. Under the terms of this license, users must give appropriate credit where using this material, and the material may not be used by anyone other than the copyright holder for commercial purposes. This change begins with materials published in May 2020 and beyond.
